Parliamentary Questions related to Loan Charge suicides:

House of Commons Oral Treasury Questions - 3rd July 2018

House of Commons Debate - Loan Charge 2019: Sir Amyas Morse Review - 19th March 2020

Sir Edward Davey (Kingston and Surbiton)

In the all-party loan charge group, we took evidence from a number of family members of people who had committed suicide as a result of the loan charge, and I can underline the point that he is making. The impact on people who had been law-abiding and hard-working throughout their lives has been quite traumatic. In a particular case that I remember—I am sure that the hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Ruth Cadbury) will remember this—the person who took his own life did not owe a huge amount of money. It was the fact that he had been made to feel like a criminal when he was anything but a criminal.

House of Commons Oral Treasury Questions (topical questions) – 7th December 2021

Sarah Green MP (Chesham and Amersham) – topical question 4

The Government have confirmed that eight people facing the loan charge have lost their lives to suicide. One of my constituents recently told me that they are a totally nervous wreck and have contemplated ending their life on numerous occasions. In the light of the heavy toll that the loan charge is taking on the lives of those facing it, will the Government commit to a fresh and independent review of the loan charge?
